

Cannabidiol (CBD): is a phytocannabinoid that is a naturally occurring compound found in cannabis, a plant with a rich history as a medicine going back thousands of years. Before we move on, there are very specific terms used in the “cannabis” industry and it’s important to clearly understand both the similarities and unique differences about each.

Cannabis: currently used to connote “marijuana” but in fact it is originally a genus of flowering plants with three main species: Cannabis Sativa, Cannabis Indica, and Cannabis Ruderalis.

Cannabis Sativa: becoming more understood to have two main sub-species (categories) called “Marijuana” and “Hemp”.

Tetrahydrocannabinol (THC): the psychoactive compound causing one to feel “high”

Cannabinoid: a class of diverse chemical compounds that acts on cannabinoid receptors (CB1/CB receptors) within the Endocannabinoid system.

Endocannabinoid system (ECS): a biological system composed of endogenous cannabinoids(endocannabinoids) that are involved in regulating a variety of physiological and cognitive processes.

Legality of CBD

At the Federal level, the US Senate passed the Agricultural Improvement Act of 2018 ("2018 Federal Farm Bill") which removed hemp as a Schedule 1 substance and reclassified it as an "agricultural commodity". Federal law imposed the following guidelines as part of the 2018 farm bill:

- The hemp being formulated must contain less than 0.3% THC.
- The hemp must adhere to the shared state-federal regulations
- The hemp must be grown by a properly state licensed grower

Therefore, hemp derived CBD is legal in all 50 states at the Federal level but each state has the power to invoke its own state laws as long as it adheres to the general guidelines stated above. This is where much of the confusion comes as some states have imposed their own state laws that limit the approved Federal guidelines.

Hemp vs Marijuana

While Hemp naturally contains a very low concentration of THC (0.3% or less), Marijuana is abundant in THC with concentrations between 15% to 40%.

Because Marijuana is abundant in THC, it is naturally grown for its psychoactive properties, whether it be for recreational or medicinal use. Marijuana can be smoked, inhaled, ingested or injected directly into the body. THC is also used in a variety of methods including vaporizers, capsules, edibles and more.

Hemp, on the other hand, is primarily used for industrial purposes as it is capable of producing hundreds of crucial resources such as paper, clothing, building materials, biofuel, food products, oils and more. With the fast-growing popularity of CBD across the globe, hemp is also used to produce a wide variety of THC-free CBD products.

Today the therapeutic properties of CBD are being tested and confirmed by scientists and doctors around the world. A safe, non-addictive, non-psychoactive compound, CBD is one of more than a hundred "Phyto cannabinoids," which are unique to cannabis and endow the plant with robust therapeutics!
